Generosity doesn't happen overnight. Instead, it is a process.

The article was written by Dan Serns, senior pastor of the Richardson Seventh-day Adventist Church, Richardson, Texas, United States.

We are called to take care of ourselves, our families, and our community. We are called to be stewards of our resources, using them to serve God and others. We are called to be generous in our giving, even if it means sacrificing our own needs.

Family worship gives every family an opportunity to daily rebuild the altar of God. It is a time to connect with God, to reflect on our lives, and to make plans for the future.

Officers of Stewardship Ministries have agreed to write the 2025 Offertory Tract, which will later be available in English, French, Portuguese, Russian, and Spanish. The videos are now available in Portuguese and Spanish.

Generosity doesn't happen overnight. Instead, it is a process. We are called to take care of ourselves, our families, and our community. We are called to be stewards of our resources, using them to serve God and others. We are called to be generous in our giving, even if it means sacrificing our own needs.

We are called to be generous in our giving, even if it means sacrificing our own needs. Family worship gives every family an opportunity to daily rebuild the altar of God. It is a time to connect with God, to reflect on our lives, and to make plans for the future.

Family worship gives every family an opportunity to daily rebuild the altar of God. It is a time to connect with God, to reflect on our lives, and to make plans for the future. We are called to take care of ourselves, our families, and our community. We are called to be stewards of our resources, using them to serve God and others. We are called to be generous in our giving, even if it means sacrificing our own needs.

Family worship gives every family an opportunity to daily rebuild the altar of God. It is a time to connect with God, to reflect on our lives, and to make plans for the future. We are called to take care of ourselves, our families, and our community. We are called to be stewards of our resources, using them to serve God and others. We are called to be generous in our giving, even if it means sacrificing our own needs.