Let me ask you a question: what if all you had on you was 36 dollars and you still had to provide for your family? What if your son was also recovering from a surgery, but these 36 dollars were the exact amount you had to return as tithe? What would you do?

"I am willing to sin"
That is what Osvaldino told the Conference cashier, in São Paulo, Brazil, as he asked for his tithe receipt. "Please, give me the receipt, before I use the money to help myself."

Although Osvaldino was trying to make fun of the situation, the feeling was real. He hadn't gone out to sell books that week, so, renouncing that money could possibly mean lack of food at home. Temptation was hitting hard. But Osvaldino decided to put God first, return his tithe and go out to sell books.

As he approached his first potential customer with his canvassing speech, the man invited a friend to hear the presentation.

Not only did the two men appreciate the content of Osvaldino's speech but they both bought a set of books each and even paid in advance without having received the products in hands.

As Osvaldino went back to the Conference to pick up the order, the feeling in his heart was no longer that of temptation, but of gratitude and thankfulness to the Lord for giving him a way to provide for his family.

As you return your tithe and give your Promise, ask Jesus to eliminate any possible fear that prevents you from being loyal and faithful. Allow Him to work through you and to be your only Master.

May we put our desires last and God first.
