As a young boy, Eric struggled with frequent nightmares. He dreamed of attacks by strange animals that looked like some of the divinities worshipped in his culture. He would often wake up sweating and crying, and as soon as he went back to sleep, the nightmares would return. To make things worse, Eric's family frequently heard strange noises on the steel roof of their house, like someone running or a stone rolling. The parents were convinced that their home was haunted and that evil forces wanted to kill their son.

They tried every possible means to ensure protection from these supernatural attacks. Among many other things, the parents would bring the boy to a Hindu priest for regular rituals, and once a year, they would do a pilgrimage to the grave of a priest. They vowed not to cut Eric's hair until he turned 7. However, these strategies did not bring the little boy peace. Finally, they resolved to seek help from the God of the Bible. At bedtime, the mother would read Psalm 91 while laying hands on the boy's head.

Gradually, Eric began making the connection between a night without nightmares and prayers before sleeping. He became convinced of the existence of a God who is more powerful than any evil force that was harassing him. For complete security and with the assurance of God's power, Eric dedicated his life to Jesus.
